

Updated May 10, 2007 10:46PM

What grads want

By Carly Weber
The Gazette
carly.weber@gazettecommunications.com

Registries make buying gifts for happy couples and brand new babies a piece of cake. Pleasing college grads isn't always so easy.

“The horrors are just, like, getting the teddy bear, tacky stuff like that that says ‘2007,’” said Carrie Ehrmann, 22, an Amana native who graduated May 6 from Coe College.

In high school, “I got a book called ‘Hugs for Grads,’ ... a 2003 medallion that is sitting at home. It’s all in a Rubbermaid under my bed at home.”

The key offenders, according to a 2007 Dormbuys.com poll, are picture frames and albums, stuffed animals, books, candles, clothes, cards without money and anything that says “graduate” or “2007.”

Dormbuys surveyed college freshmen about their high school graduation gifts, but college seniors say the selection is the same four years later.

Instead of knickknacks certain to be packed away, consider cold hard cash, graduates advise.

“You can’t go wrong with cash because then you can go buy the things you really want,” University of Iowa senior Jill Goerdt, 21, of Cedar Rapids, said.

Gift cards to big-box stores, not niche boutiques, also are a safe bet.

“Gift cards to Target or Kohls or Best Buy, places you can go and buy just about anything,” Goerdt said. “It gives graduates the option to choose what they want.”

She also suggests anything apartment- or job-related.

While practical gifts often are preferred, sentimentality has its place, too, according to graduates The Gazette interviewed.

“Cards from family members that say how proud they are, that really means a lot when there’s heartfelt thoughts,” Ehrmann said.

All agree they also wouldn’t turn down the big-ticket items that some proud parents are bestowing on their graduates: splurges like trips to Europe, cars, laptops, down payments on condos.

Coe graduate Lindsey Driscoll’s parents surprised her a couple of weeks ago with a new-to-her Toyota Camry.

“I’ve never had that kind of surprise before,” the Cedar Rapids native said. “I had tears come to my eyes.”

(Cliff Jette/The Gazette)
Recent Coe College graduate Lindsey Driscoll of Cedar Rapids received a Toyota Camry from her parents. Though college graduates suggest cash and gift cards as graduation presents, they also appreciate big-ticket gifts.

Print this Email this
RSS News Headlines

My Account Subscribe Place A Classified

Blogs

- News | Sports | Topical
- Notes from the newsroom - By Jamie Kelly
Latest post: Front page stories for 11/10
- 24-Hour Dorman - By Todd Dorman
Latest post: Friday Mailbag — Doormat
- You Are Here - By Jennifer Hemmingsen
Latest post: 11/8 Column: Let's talk about race
- The Archive Attic - By Gazette Library
Latest post: From Armory Warehouse To Mini-Mall In Decorah
- Keeping Up With The Joneses
Latest post: Painting begins
- A Community Recovers
Latest post: Clara & Larry, 1861 Ellis Blvd NW
- Arrested Developments - A Crime Blog
Latest post: Girlfriend stalker gone wild
- Looking in at Iowa - By John McGlothlen
Latest post: Ex-U of I grad student files suit against music professor and University of Iowa; Alleges inappropriate sexual remarks, humor, touching, relationship
- refocus - By Gazette Photographers
- County Supervision - By Adam Belz
- Eye on the Island - By Rick Smith
Latest post: 'Staggering' disaster costs are like a Twilight Zone; City Hall bidding on two costly contracts should help cut through one piece of the mystery
- Ramblin' With Rasdal - By Dave Rasdal
Latest post: Iowans Show The World -